(NU) - Sponsored News - What to do now that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has urged physicians to avoid prescribing opioids in most situations for treating chronic pain, and to seek alternative approaches?

Well, if you're worried about potentially becoming yet another statistic – a record high 28,647 deaths involving the highly addictive drugs were recorded in 2014 – know that the most popular alternative is chiropractic care. Which, as the not-for-profit Foundation for Chiropractic Progress notes in its informative white paper on the issue, is known for its drug-free, non-invasive, and cost-effective approach to relieving pain.
