

CLINTON ROMESHA

In a 2013 ceremony, U.S. Army Staff Sergeant Clinton Romesha receives the Medal of Honor for acts of gallantry on October 3, 2009, during Operation Enduring Freedom in Afghanistan.

I TRUST CHIROPRACTIC CARE

“When I first consulted a doctor of chiropractic for back pain, it was discovered that my pelvis was imbalanced – little surprise after many years of carrying military gear in all kinds of terrain. Aligning my hips and lower back, along with stretching and healthy living advice, made all the difference for me. Chiropractic is a natural alternative, and I am grateful for this care that has kept me away from having to mask my pain with addictive painkillers and their harmful side-effects. I encourage my brother and sister Veterans to consider chiropractic care for healthier living.” – Clinton Romesha

Today's chiropractor has a minimum of seven years of higher level education.
